MISSIONARY UPDATE

Mark & Jocelyn Scott

09/27/22

Cru-Jersey Metro

Our year forever starts in September, when we roll into a new school year with new goals, new resources, new energy. September is when you have empty notebooks and ten whole months in which anything could happen.

So here we are once again, barreling into another September in campus ministry. It's our 24th, if anyone's counting, so we have the rhythm of it down pretty well, but that doesn't mean we always know what to expect. This year was particularly unsettling because our team has shrunk in size quite a bit. We had to figure out who was going to pick up all the campuses that departing team members had set down, and in the re-shuffling, Mark picked up Seton Hall again.

Seton Hall has always been a bit of a problem- and a bit of a wonder. We've never managed to get officially recognized at SHU, but over and over we've been surprised at the students God's brought along who want to gather anyway, and somehow we've always had a presence on that campus. So this fall, shortly after the semester started, Mark made his way up to scenic South Orange, NJ to meet with five student women who wanted to start the year off strong.

He applauded their continued determination to seek official recognized status ("They have a high capacity for being rebuffed by priests," he told me later) and gave them what they needed there, then focused on how they could make the most of the first few weeks of the semester. Without the benefit of university promotion or meeting space, they still put together a couple of social events culminating in their first meeting of the semester. Mark wasn't able to be there for that meeting but checked in afterward to see how it had gone.

They had twenty-one students show up.

You guys. If we were in the Bible belt somewhere, at a giant school where you could do big-time promotion, twenty-one people would be sort of meh. But here in the cold, hard spiritual soil of NJ, at a school less than one fifth the size of Rutgers, with no official meeting space and no way to advertise except word of mouth...twenty-one people is pretty much miraculous.
